

Medicare Patients Losing Access to Quality Home Medical Equipment & Services in Rural America

Take Action to Stop Medicare's Attack on Access to Home Medical Equipment!

Overview

Millions of seniors and people with disabilities rely on medical equipment to live safely in their homes. Unfortunately, government policies have created many burdens for these individuals trying to receive medically necessary equipment, services, and supplies. A controversial, new program is sweeping the nation, detrimentally affecting Medicare patients who rely on Home Medical Equipment such as oxygen therapy, wheelchairs, and walkers. Tell your elected officials that you need their help protecting access to your Home Medical Equipment by passing legislation by July 15th!

Urban Auction Program for Rural America?

Starting in 2011, an auction program called "Competitive Bidding" was implemented in the largest metropolitan areas of the country where companies submitted bids to win one of the few, exclusive contracts to provide home medical equipment to Medicare beneficiaries. The concept was that by offering the opportunity for increased market-share and decreased competition, the contracted companies would be able to adjust to the severe price reductions for providing medical equipment, supplies, and services.

The program drew widespread criticism by numerous patient advocacy groups, homecare stakeholders, economists, and auction experts for its design flaws that awarded contracts to those with the cheapest prices and little regard to quality, service, experience, financial health, or presence in the community. Many Medicare patients and family caregivers reported delays in getting needed equipment and services, difficulties in finding companies to perform repairs, and receiving inferior products that the program pricing can barely afford.

In January 2016, the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services (CMS) began a 6-month, 2-part phase in expansion of applying these extreme prices derived from densely populated metropolitan areas like Chicago and Miami into rural and non-urban America, even though these areas never participated in an auction process.

Failing to factor the unique costs of accessing and caring for medically fragile Medicare patients across rural America, CMS slashed reimbursement rates for medical equipment across rural America by upwards of 50-80% on July 1st.

Impact on Medicare Beneficiaries in Rural America

For seniors and individuals with disabilities and chronic conditions in less-populated areas, home medical equipment providers can play a major role in limiting hospitalizations, nursing home stays, and other clinical interventions.

However, these irrational, unsustainable prices don't take into account the additional costs of accessing and serving this rural patient population.

Without adequate funding to cover these costs, trusted home medical equipment companies in these areas are forced to change their delivery and service policies, reduce their product offerings, or shutter their business entirely, leaving patients and caregivers in rural areas to ultimately suffer the consequences.

We Need Your Help Now!

The next few weeks are critical to getting legislative relief before irrevocable harm occurs. People for Quality Care is helping organize and amplify the voices of beneficiaries, family caregivers, and clinicians to Congress. Help us sound the alarm for urgent action to preserve access to Home Medical Equipment in rural America by:

1. Contacting Your Member of Congress

Send a letter to your elected officials asking for their help to provide rural relief. As a constituent, your legislators are interested in hearing from you and are elected to represent your needs in Congress. Visit the People for Quality Care Action Center at www.PeopleForQualityCare.org/TakeAction to send a customizable message to Congress.

Call our Medicare Complaint Hotline to share your experience. This hotline helps get the voices of those experiencing significant challenges accessing medical equipment to Congress. Your story matters!

How Can Congress Intervene?

The drastic rate reduction that took effect July 1 points to the urgent need for a legislative fix before rural communities lose their local safety-net of medical equipment companies.

Congress has already taken notice of the potential harm these cuts will cause in rural communities, introducing the Patient Access to Durable Medical Equipment Act of 2016 (S 2736 and HR 5210). This legislation will delay the second round of cuts and instruct the Centers for Medicare & Medicaid services to monitor and report on how the January 1 cuts are impacting Medicare beneficiaries in rural areas.

The Senate passed S 2736 by unanimous consent on June 23, and the House of Representatives may consider legislation soon. The House and Senate must come together in July to marry their efforts to pass meaningful reform and send legislation to the White House.

Ask your elected officials to come together and agree to a joint solution for rural relief before the July 15th Congressional recess.

Help protect access to home medical equipment in rural America.
